

Christine Parthemore is the Bacevich Fellow at the Center for a New American Security (CNAS), where she contributes primarily to the Natural Security Program and the Natural Security Blog, which examine the links among natural resources concerns and security. Her areas of expertise include energy security, climate change, critical minerals, and nuclear and nonproliferation issues. She is the author of The Obama Plan for Energy and Climate Security: Conference Proceedings and Final Recommendations and co-author of Iran: Assessing U.S. Strategic Options; Uncharted Waters: The U.S. Navy and Navigating Climate Change; and A Strategy for American Power: Energy, Climate, and National Security. She also co-authored a chapter in the 2008 book Climatic Cataclysm: The Foreign Policy and National Security Implications of Global Climate Change.

Prior to joining CNAS, she worked as an assistant to journalist Bob Woodward on State of Denial: Bush at War Part III and The Secret Man: The Story of Watergate's Deep Throat. Her research covered a broad range of American foreign and defense policy, the war on terror, and the Iraq War. She has contributed to The Washington Post and the Atlanta Journal-Constitution. Parthemore has a B.A. in political science from The Ohio State University and is a graduate student in Georgetown University's Security Studies Program.