

Shannon O'Reilly is Director of External Relations at the Center for New American Security (CNAS), responsible for directing the Center's media, Congressional, and external outreach. She brings strategic communications and public affairs experience after serving as the Deputy Director of Communications at CNAS and as a senior media strategist at The Rendon Group. Prior to joining CNAS, Ms. O'Reilly managed a team of multilingual analysts supporting the United States Central Command. She also provided communications support to the United States Strategic Command, the 3rd Infantry Division, MNF-I and a Fortune 50 defense firm. She focused on traditional and non-traditional media coverage of the war on terror. Ms. O'Reilly graduated from the University of Massachusetts Amherst with a B.A. in political science and Spanish. She also studied at the Universitario de Puerto Rico Mayagüez, where she researched local sentiment toward the closing of the U.S. Naval Base on Vieques.