

Nirav Patel is the Bacevich Fellow at the Center for a New American Security (CNAS) specializing in Asian affairs. Prior to joining CNAS, he worked as a nonproliferation research analyst at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. He was also a graduate research assistant at Georgetown University's Walsh School of Foreign Service where he conducted extensive research on the roles of alliances for security cooperation. He has contributed to numerous journal articles and his writings have appeared in dozens of newspapers, including: Asia Times, Boston Globe, Straits Times, and Korea Times and is a guest contributor to the South Asia Analysts Group. Mr. Patel has an M.A. in international security studies from Georgetown University's Walsh School of Foreign Service and is fluent in Gujarati and Spanish.